FINANCIAL FOUNDATIONS

Summary of the Teacher License Agreement

What the agreement means for you. If anything here differs from the full agreement, the full agreement governs.

When you complete the training and sign the Teacher License Agreement together with your parent or guardian, The RiseSingh Foundation grants you a personal license to teach Financial Foundations. This summary explains what that license allows, what it requires, and how it can end. Please read it before you sign.

What the license allows you to do

You may call your sessions “Financial Foundations” and use the program’s name and logo to promote them. You may teach the complete ten-session curriculum at any school or community site that has signed the Host Site Approval Form, and you may print and hand out the session materials to your students. If classmates want to help you teach, they are welcome to, provided each of them completes the training and holds their own license. You may also suggest improvements to the curriculum through the teacher portal.

The Foundation provides the curriculum, the training, the forms and surveys, and a session kit sent to you by mail. The kit contains the raffle tickets, prizes, candy, and room-rules poster for all ten sessions, along with a Financial Foundations shirt.

What the license does not allow

You may not charge students, families, or host sites for any part of the program. You may not change the curriculum, skip sessions, or present your own material under the program’s name. You may not share the materials with anyone who is not licensed, or post them online. You may not run a session outside the supervision requirements set by your host site. You may not state or imply that the Foundation supervises your sessions, vouches for you personally, or is responsible for what happens in the room. And you may not sign agreements, accept sponsorships, or open accounts in the name of the Foundation or the program.

What you are responsible for

Your sessions are your responsibility

Obtaining your host site’s written approval and following its rules, including whatever supervision it requires.

Collecting a signed consent form from a parent or guardian for every student before their first session.

Your own conduct, and the conduct of any co-teachers, in every session.

Delivering each session as written and returning the session logs and student surveys to the Foundation.

How the license continues and how it ends

The license remains in effect for each school year in which you are actively teaching and reporting, and it ends on June 30 of the year you graduate from high school. It lapses automatically if any of its conditions stops being met, for example if a session is delivered without a host site’s approval on file, or if session logs stop being submitted.

The Foundation may also revoke the license at any time and for any reason, including on the basis of a report that a session went badly, and it is not required to investigate before doing so. When the license ends, for any reason, you must stop using the program’s name and delete the materials. You may continue to describe accurately what you did and what you accomplished.

Ownership

The Foundation owns the Financial Foundations name, the curriculum, and everything in the teacher toolkit, including any improvements you suggest. You retain your relationships with your host site and students, your reputation, and your record of what you accomplished, which the Foundation documents in a recognition letter at the end of each completed cycle.

Questions

If anything in this summary or in the full agreement is unclear, write to hello@risesingh.org before you sign. We would rather answer a question now than have a misunderstanding later.
